

tgi and Co-Lab – development of Hub Co-ops

Scope

- tgi - teaching, giving, learning - software 'tools' provide a cyberspace framework for new socio-cultural-economic systems to evolve from common values and aspirations at 'grass-roots' levels
- as choices to 'tgi' are made, participants generate a local currency; while learning to collaborate and bond in common interest, supported by the Hub Coops
- the Co-Lab model can evolve in tandem, as members, whether individuals or corporate bodies, find entrepreneurial opportunities as co-owners, co-designers, co-producers and co-consumers
- 'The Company' provides licenses to specialists to build the Hub Coops while sharing the income generated from the e-commerce facilities, services and media links of the platform
- like-minded members join the Hub Coops to connect as tgi service providers or service users
- the choices and activities of the membership increase the income; while the collective purchasing power can be aggregated to benefit all members
- the licenses enable Hub members to develop the software to maintain functionality at the 'cutting edge'; while anchoring a stimulus to source or develop local infrastructure and hardware
- Hub Coops serve the members in a variety of ways, which too will evolve:
 - Hub 'user' members are encouraged to shop with their 'provider' members preferentially
 - local currency is introduced and recycled as discounts and incentives to shop locally
 - members' knowledge, projects, productions, media and purchasing power can be presented and aggregated for common benefit across the demand-and-supply chains of the networks
 - local T.V. providers can join and support the network to extend media platforms, production outlets and gain interactivity on T.V.

Operations

- the diverse range of expertise and associated networks of Hub licensees can provide an valuable 'melting-pot' to the design, build and piloting of Hub Coop models
- tgi members can initiate hub teams as licensee stakeholders and/or as consultants to others
- the groups can collaborate to develop and workshop strategic and operational models
- more detailed specifications, critical paths and budget costs can be assessed for funding needs
- potential corporate models can be considered and related to diverse situations and challenges
- an endless, inclusive, transparent and flexible process can be revealed; able to be augmented and sustained across all sectors, communities and locations
- specialists, consultants, activists, community 'champions', social networks, media producers, and artists of all kinds can join and support project teams as partners with investors and funders
- a new vision for life-long learning and skills exchange across diverse communities globally can inspire and energise an evolving, living model for this new era
- in the process, the 'trinity' of banking, media and education can transfigure to support humankind as we learn to enjoy debt-free, inspired living the 'Co-Lab' way
